

Overview

The Insight assessments measure personality traits and help us consider how they might impact competencies and performance at work. The Insight assessments are scientifically validated tools and each trait on the assessments have been mapped to the CarMax competency models. As part of this study, specific traits were identified as keys to success as a Manager at CarMax.

Your Coach and Senior Manager will help you understand how the traits identified by the assessments may be potential strengths or opportunities. You will meet with your Coach and Senior Manager to review your report and use this worksheet to help create an IDP.

How to Prepare for the Meeting

1. Read this entire document
2. Review the Insight report provided by Talent Management
3. Complete the Insight IDP chart
4. Answer the discussion questions
5. Meet with your Coach and Senior Manager to create an IDP

Insight & IDP Chart

The chart below will help you identify some potential competency strengths and opportunities based on your Insight report.

- Review your Insight report and highlight personality traits that are considered "high" or "low"
 - High = Scored in top right three boxes
 - Low = Scored in bottom left three boxes
 - Example:
 - High - Work Pace ☐☐☐☐☐☐☐☐☒
 - Low - Self-Reliance ☐☒☐☐☐☐☐☐☐
- Review the Potential Strengths and Potential Opportunities columns below and mark the traits listed that correspond to your profile
 - For example, if you scored High Assertiveness, you would check the box in the Potential Strengths column for Directions of Influence and the box in Potential Opportunities for Leadership Style
- Identify a suggested IDP focus area by looking for trends in the Potential Opportunities column.

What Does Insight Measure?

The Insight assessments measure a number of personality traits and characteristics that can impact a person's job performance. The following is a description of the individual traits and what they measure. Keep in mind that for personality traits, low scores are not necessarily bad and high scores are not necessarily good. The significance of the score depends on what is needed in the job.

Use the chart below when reading your report to better understand the personality traits.

Reflective: The tendency to be perceptive, introspective, and philosophical, as opposed to a tendency to be less contemplative.	May spend little time in reflective thought. Feel little need to probe deeply in order to understand.	Like to think things over in depth; look at a situation from several sides, consider alternatives, consider why things have happened in the past and wonder about the future.
Structured: Preference for thinking through problems or situations using logical, systematic procedures and a structured approach, as opposed to problem solving or reaching conclusions in a more direct, single-step fashion.	Tend to approach situations in a freeform or unstructured manner. May not feel much need to take a step-by-step approach when solving problems or developing plans. May express little interest in math or logic.	Tend to think through situations in a structured, systematic manner. May plan a step-by-step approach for most projects or tasks. May express interest in math or logic.
Serious Minded: The tendency to be serious-minded and deliberate in dealing with information/situations.	Quick to make decisions or come to conclusions, usually comfortable making decisions without taking time to deliberate.	Tend to take things seriously and to carefully consider decisions and actions.
Fact-Based: The tendency to view information and situations factually and dispassionately, as opposed to viewing situations from a more personal frame of reference.	View things intuitively or subjectively. Tend to focus on the intangibles or feelings when analyzing a situation, rather than the facts. Tend to reach intuitive conclusions and decisions.	View things factually and objectively. Consider primarily the facts and data when making a decision.
Realistic: The tendency to be an imaginative, perhaps wishful thinker, as opposed to a more practical and here-and-now thinker.	Tend to think in imaginative or wishful terms. May be a dreamer who generates a lot of possibilities and ideas.	Tend to think in practical and realistic terms. Have a sensible, immediate approach to life. Likely to focus on results and rely upon past experience.

Work Pace: The pace at which one prefers to do things.	Prefer a slower or an unhurried work style.	Prefer a vigorous schedule where things happen quickly and a person is busy.
Self-Reliance: Preference for relying on oneself and accepting responsibility as opposed to relying on or seeking/ accepting support from others.	Tend to rely on others for support or assistance. May be a "team player" willing to share tasks with others.	Tend to be independent of others and self-reliant. Like to make independent decisions and accept responsibility.
Work Organization: The tendency to be organized, planful, and structured in the way one works and handles tasks.	May spend little time organizing work tasks; may not prefer work that requires structure and organization.	Prefers a structured and orderly approach to work; is probably viewed as organized and likely to have "everything in place."
Multi-Tasking: The tendency to prefer variety and handling multiple tasks, versus predictability and focusing on one thing at a time.	Prefers to focus on one task at a time; is likely to prefer an environment that is predictable with limited change in how things are done.	Tends to enjoy variety and juggling multiple tasks; is likely to prefer an environment that is unpredictable.
Need for Task Closure: The extent to which one has a strong need to finish each task that they start.	May be comfortable changing focus and leaving some tasks unfinished.	Likely to persist in completing each task undertaken.
Acceptance of Control: The extent to which one is willing to accept direction or work in a structured environment.	Prefer a less structured, more loosely defined work setting.	Likely to follow rules, procedures, and guidelines.
Frustration Tolerance: The tendency to be resilient when faced with frustrations and irritations as opposed to feeling their effects.	Tend to be sensitive to and show concern for problems.	Resilient; not easily upset. Seldom worries.
Need for Freedom: The extent to which one prefers personal freedom and independence in their job.	Show little need for personal freedom. Generally comfortable functioning in a structured work environment.	Need and value personal or organizational freedom. May feel that any outside structure and influences are undue constraints.
Need for Attention/Recognition: The extent to which one wants or needs personal attention, recognition, and positive feedback.	Can be a quiet achiever for whom recognition is unimportant. Motivation comes from personal standards or values. May reject or be uncomfortable with public recognition.	Can have a need to be noticed and to be seen as important and successful. Seek positive feedback and recognition from others.
Detail Orientation: The extent to which one prefers tasks which require them to be detail-oriented or thorough in their work.	Tend to avoid or dislike personal involvement in tasks requiring detail orientation.	Likely to be personally involved with the detail aspects of a task. Enjoy doing detailed work.

Assertiveness: The tendency to take the initiative with people and make one's presence felt, as opposed to a preference for remaining in the background.	May appear quiet or may exhibit a "low profile" approach in dealing with people.	Likely to express self forcefully.
Sociability: The extent to which one seeks and feels comfortable in social situations.	May be shy or may prefer to be alone to read, work, etc. Tend to avoid or be uninterested in extensive people contact for long periods.	Likely to seek out and engage people. Enjoy social activity. Comfortable meeting new people.
Need to Be Liked: Desire to be accepted and liked by others, as opposed to having little concern about acceptance.	May be competitive and try hard to win. May place more emphasis on protecting personal needs and opinions than on being liked and accepted.	Tend to be accommodating with others. Being liked and accepted by others is important. Cooperative.
Positive About People: The tendency to be trusting and optimistic in one's outlook toward people, as opposed to being critical or cynical.	May be skeptical in the evaluation of people in general and cautious in trusting others.	Likely to give people the "benefit of the doubt" and take people at their word. Tend to concentrate most on the positive attributes in others.
Insight: The extent to which one is aware of or "tuned in" to others' feelings.	Have little interest in analyzing or understanding others' actions or motives.	Tend to be understanding of and sensitive to others' feelings.
Optimism: The tendency to have an optimistic and positive outlook under most circumstances, as opposed to having a more negative or pessimistic outlook.	May have a pessimistic outlook or be prone to worry.	Tend to have a positive outlook.
Criticism Tolerance: The response to actual or perceived criticism. "Thick-skinned" vs. "thin-skinned".	Highly attuned to the personal aspects of a situation. Take performance feedback as an indication of self-worth.	Usually looks at situations objectively, rather than in terms of personal implications. Accepts criticism as constructive.
Self-Control: The tendency toward a highly self-controlled, deliberate, and serious style as opposed to a more unrestrained and carefree style.	Tend to be spontaneous in action. Tend to act or speak without restraint. Tend to show feelings.	Likely to show consistent and controlled behavior. May not reveal a great deal about self to others. Tend to show restraint over expression of feelings.
